

Mr. Webster and the Hungarians.

Mr. Webster being at the Astor House for a few days, the Hungarian exiles, now the free guests of that hospitable establishment, called upon the distinguished statesman in a body.

The venerable Ujhazy, late Governor of Comorn, with all his family, was introduced to Mr. and Mrs. Webster, by Count Vass—another Hungarian exile—who, in the course of four months, has learned to express himself in the English language, with propriety. Ujhazy addressed Mr. Webster with much feeling, in the following words:

"Sir—Strangers and in a strange land, in the midst of our misfortunes we come to America, to seek an asylum here. Power cannot stretch its hands so far as to reach us in this western world. Here we are safe, and we feel ourselves secure."

In one of your late speeches you expressed a sympathy for us in the midst of our distress, which has penetrated our hearts. We thank you. We pray you to encourage the same feeling, to cultivate the same sympathy, and so to mitigate our sorrows."

We look to America for kindness and protection. We look to you, sir, for counsel and consolation, and that power which sees all things, and governs all, will not fail in its reward to your generous mind."

Mr. Webster, taking the Governor by the hand, made the following reply:

"I give you my hand with great pleasure. We are glad to see you and your friends. The effort which you have so gallantly made for Hungarian Nationality and Hungarian Liberty has won our hearts. We welcome you to these western shores. We are honored that you have sought an asylum here from the political misfortunes which you have suffered at home. Our sympathies are with you and for you, and for those objects of your affections which you have left behind you. The whole American people take an interest in your efforts for Liberty and Independence. The blow of power which struck down your hopes fell heavily also on our own hearts. In the midst of your misfortunes you come away to a land of strangers in search of safety. Here you find it. Here we assure it to you. No enemy's hand shall harm or touch you. Hungarians, you are all welcome! You who have come, and your friends who shall come, will all find here sympathy, protection and security. Again I say, Sir, your gallantry, your love of Liberty, and your misfortunes, have made you welcome to all America."

Ujhazy, when this speech was interpreted to him by Count Vass, was affected to tears, and desired the Count to say, that God would not forget such considerate and generous sympathy."

A White Girl nearly sold into Slavery.

One of the most revolting, and, at the same time, touching scenes, it has ever been our lot to witness, occurred yesterday in the Auction Store of Mr. N. Vignati, on St. Louis street. The estate of Mr. Devenuto Duran, lately deceased, consisting chiefly of slaves, was to be sold for the benefit of the creditor. The negroes were brought up as is usually the case, one by one, and exhibited to the bystanders, before being put to the hammer. On the presentation of the third, advertised as "Madeline, an orphan quarteron, aged about nine years," every one was horrified to behold paraded before them, a lovely girl delicately formed, white as the purest Circassian race, her face buried in her hands, and her slender form convulsed with sobs. There was a pause of some minutes. The crowd could not realize that one of their own race could be thus led up among negroes to be passed into a life-long bondage. Amusement was succeeded by indignation, as several gentlemen set about inquiring as to the manner in which the child had been thrust into such degrading associations.

Mr. Duran, it appears, was a Spaniard by birth, was some years since in affluence, in this city; but latterly, his circumstances declining, he moved from the First to the Third Municipality, where he kept a small grocery store and struggled through comparative poverty. None of the negroes knew any thing of the early history of the girl, except one old man, who said her mother was a white woman, but dying, when her child was yet but an infant, Mr. Duran took the orphan in charge to rear as an adopted child. This was when he was in prosperity. For some years after the death of the mother, a lady was in the habit of visiting Mr. Duran's house, regularly, to see the child, and continued her visits until about the time he moved into the Third Municipality, since when, four or five years ago, she has never been seen. Whether this lady was a relative or friend of the mother, interested in the fate of her offspring, the old man knew not; nor did he know who the lady was, or whence she came.

Upon this information the sale was stopped, and Madeline was taken possession of by Mr. Charles Lovenskiold, to whose humane exertions in her behalf, she is perhaps indebted for her liberty. Mr. L. has kindly installed her in his own family, and will bring her up as a member of it, if the law does not defeat his benevolent intentions. The girl that of late years mingled almost exclusively with the negroes of Mr. Duran's household, is intelligent beyond her years, speaks both French and Spanish fluently, and understands English.

The affair speedily obtained public notoriety in the lower part of the city, and created an intense excitement. Several free persons of color interested themselves in the case, and in a few hours collected among their own class, nearly two hundred dollars, to buy the girl out of the estate, and bestow upon her, her freedom. This has not been permitted, however, and from present appearances, there is but little probability of her subjection to the degradation of being included in the chattels of the succession. Mr. Duran has left no heirs, and dying intestate, his property escheats to the State, after satisfaction to the creditors. There is but one creditor, and his feelings were as deeply affected yesterday, as those of any person present. Mr. Lovenskiold and others, have taken the girl's case in hand, however, have determined upon an entire purification of the girl, and if it be practicable, will bring the case before the courts in such a manner, that a jury shall pass upon her blood.
